A Real Westerner Passes

THE Angel of Death has again visited the thinning band of heroic Alberta pioneers, and with the rustling of his sable wings another great heart is stilled custing of his sable wings anotherers, and would and another gap is left in the front rank of the builders of Western Canada.

FEW western men were so widely known and highly esteemed as Hon. Dr. R. G. Brett, former Lieutenant-Governor of Alberta. His death brings to a close a long and very active professional and political life, the most of which was spent in the country now comprised within this province. His association with Alberta began with the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway, and confinued without interruption until advancing years caused him to seek residence in a southerly cline.

A Sangegon for the C. P. R. and the collectes at Bankhead in the early days, founder and proprietor of the sanitarium at Banff, member of the Northwest Assembly and of the Advisory Council in Territorial times, and later as representative of His Magive in the capital of the province, he gained an acquaintanceship extending from the lakes to the coust, and his golial disposition won personal friends who are numbered in thousands.

ing from the lakes to the coast, and his genial disposition won personal friends who are numbered in thousands.

H IS passing breaks another link with the remote hands removes a figure who played a leading role in the formative days, and means the loss of a citizen who was held in high regard by people of all classes and sections.
